Domainer Mardi Gras 2010

The Ultimate Business Trip

New Orleans Domaining Conference Offers the Most in Fun, Education, and Networking

It is important to us that Domainer Mardi Gras focus on boosting revenues in 2010. I think the global effect of the recession in 2009 was a toll on nearly all Internet businesses, and the domaining industry was no exception.

*-- Michael Ward, Executive Director,
Domainer Mardi Gras*

DOMAINER MARDI GRAS

When: February 11-13, 2010

Where: Historic downtown New Orleans Marriott

Room cost: Only $179/night

Conference cost: As low as $495, with online discounts for early birds through October 15, 2009

Registration website: DomainerMardiGras.com

The greatest party to ever qualify as a business expense will undoubtedly be Domainer Mardi Gras 2010.

Top domainers and revelers from around the world will roll into New Orleans for the second annual event February 11-13, 2010, during the height of the city's carnival season.

The conference will once again be the talk of the industry with fresh speakers and educational events focused on new ways to make money in the domaining and parked advertising arena.

"It is important to us that Domainer Mardi Gras focus on boosting revenues in 2010. I think the global effect of the recession in 2009 was a toll on nearly all Internet businesses, and the domaining industry was no exception," said Michael Ward, Executive Director of Domainer Mardi Gras. "The value of owning domain real estate is that you have the control to be creative in tough times and the opportunity to rebuild even bigger when tough times turn upward."

"That is what Domainer Mardi Gras 2010 is about, ringing in better times with a great party and fresh ideas for growth," Ward said.

The line-up for Domainer Mardi Gras 2010 builds on the successes of the past show. So, get ready to pinch some tails and suck some heads with fellow domainers during a massive crawfish boil. For the less adventurous, traditional Cajun food and other alternatives will be served during the festivities.

A full line-up of speakers will be announced soon on DomainerMardiGras.com, but other details have already been hammered down.

Despite the demand for hotels in New Orleans during Mardi Gras driving up room rates, event organizers were able to negotiate the lowest rates for any domaining conference at one of the nicest hotels around. For those who participate in the conference, rooms at the historic downtown New Orleans Marriott are only $179 dollars a night. What's more, if you book a room through the conference's group rate, available on DomainerMardiGras.com, you get $300 off of one participant's conference ticket.

Book a hotel room at the New Orleans Marriott through the conference group rate and get an early bird conference pass for as low as $495 available online at DomainerMardiGras.com, through October 15, 2009.

One of the most appreciated touches of last year's event was that conference sessions started a bit later than at most of the other industry conferences, which allowed folks to roll with the night-time parties and still get the most out of the day-time information sessions. That will be important again in 2010, as another Bourbon Street balcony will again offer the best seats of the French Quarter.

Just ask Dan Kimball of Comwired.com and a participant last year who helped direct crowd activities for those on the balcony.

"The only adjective worthy of describing an event like this is beyond reproach. I encourage everyone to make it out in 2010," Kimball said.

Yes, the krewe of Domainer Mardi Gras will roll again in 2010.

So, mark your calendar, get your camera ready, print some extra business cards, and prepare to have the networking party of your life.

See ya'll there!!
